

The Honorable Michael K. Powell
Chairman
Federal Communications Commission

Washington, D.C. 20554

Dear Chairman Powell:

I am Donald L Sizelove, currently working for the US Air Force in Germany.

I have had my internet service through the same local provider in Kentucky since 1994 - long before the telephone companies became involved with internet services. I've never considered changing it, because my long-term email address has become part of my identity.

I have access to this ISP wherever I travel all around the globe, and use it to keep in contact with my family still living in my home in Kentucky.

I've had family members start out their internet usage with the national companies and telephone providers, only to encounter great frustration and lack of concern for the customer. I've always managed to receive very personalized care from my local internet service provider.

I hope you will make the right choice to protect the ISPs access to the public telephone networks. I don't want to lose my variety of choice, and I especially don't want to return to a national ISP.

Thank you!

Sincerely,

Donald L Sizelove
